SUNDAY, MAY 29, 1819.

THE British paper of William Cobbett, now published in the United States, is a most excellent one. It has appeared with the greatest regularity for the past six months, and has been read with the greatest satisfaction by the public. The editor, Mr. Cobbett, has taken great care to make his paper as instructive and entertaining as possible. His articles are written with great spirit and good sense, and are read with the greatest delight by all who read them. The paper is published every Sunday, and is sold for five cents per copy. The subscription price is six dollars per annum.

THOMAS DAVIS.

TO THE AURORA.

Mr. Davis,

As you were kind enough to forward me a copy of your Janus, containing a vindication of your late publication, I am induced to answer you. I hope the following facts upon the subject will be found to be incorrect, as far as they are known to me, either in the British or American papers.

The facts are these: It is not true that Mr. D. has been deprived of his salary, or that he has been dismissed from his situation.

The author of the letter, Mr. Cobbett, is an able and honest man, and I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of his statements.

Yours truly,

THOMAS DAVIS.

THE NEW YORKER.

It is a well-known fact that the New Yorker, written by Mr. G. T. Carpenter, has been suppressed. It is a paper that has been published for many years, and has been read with much interest by the public. The editor, Mr. Carpenter, has taken great care to make his paper as instructive and entertaining as possible. His articles are written with great spirit and good sense, and are read with the greatest delight by all who read them. The paper is published every Sunday, and is sold for five cents per copy. The subscription price is six dollars per annum.

THOMAS DAVIS.

THE NEW YORKER.

It is a well-known fact that the New Yorker, written by Mr. G. T. Carpenter, has been suppressed. It is a paper that has been published for many years, and has been read with much interest by the public. The editor, Mr. Carpenter, has taken great care to make his paper as instructive and entertaining as possible. His articles are written with great spirit and good sense, and are read with the greatest delight by all who read them. The paper is published every Sunday, and is sold for five cents per copy. The subscription price is six dollars per annum.

THOMAS DAVIS.